

The Midnight Folk

I like John Masfield's poems, but this novel was all over the place. A few good quotes:

- "Besides, it was legal in a sense, for they were at war at the time, or just had been, or would have been, or soon would be again."
- "Everything was singing, or murmuring, or sighing because life was so good."
- "He had a strange, troubled, happy face as though he were always having very difficult puzzles set to him and always finding the answers." <— I wouldn't mind looking like this
- "There's nothing I like better," Edward said, "than to have my enemy looking for me. Then I don't have to look for him."
